MONKEY KING

Monkey King Creates Havoc in Heaven is adapted from a story in the famous classical Chinese mythological novel Journey to the West.

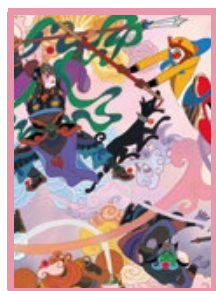

The story is vivid and entertaining, portraying Sun Wukong as an embodiment of the ideals and wisdom of the Chinese working people.

The comic book was first published by Liaoning Fine Arts Publishing House in December, 1984.

It tells the story of the Monkey King, Sun Wukong, who fears neither heaven nor earth. He takes the Sea-Calming Treasure of the Dragon Palace, enjoys the celestial peaches, divine wine, and golden elixirs of Heaven, and wreaks havoc at the Peach Banquet of the Queen Mother of the West. The Jade Emperor, enraged, sends heavenly soldiers and generals multiple times to capture the Monkey King. However, Sun Wukong, with his vast magical powers, remains unfazed by swords, axes, fire, lightning, or even being refined in a furnace. The Jade Emperor finds himself powerless against him.

NEZHA CONQUERS THE DRAGON KING

Nezha Conquers the Dragon King is a classic Chinese mythological story derived from "The Investiture of the Gods." It recounts the legend of Nezha rebelling against the Dragon King to rid the people of evil.

In 1984, Liaoning Fine Arts Publishing House adapted it into a picture book, with illustrations by Fei Changfu, Lin Zhen, and Zhang Xiushi.

The picture book faithfully recreates the main plot of Nezha's story, from his birth to his uprising in the sea. The artwork adopts the style of traditional New Year paintings, featuring vibrant characters, rich colors, and meticulous details, all imbued with distinctive national characteristics.

THE FOUR HEAVENLY KINGS DUEL MATTE SLEEVE

In Buddhism, the Four Heavenly Kings are important guardian deities among the heavenly beings, serving as the outer protectors of the chief god, Indra. They are said to reside on the slopes of Mount Sumeru, guarding the four continents of Jambudvīpa, Pūṅgalavardhana, Uttarakuru, and Aparagodaniya. In Chinese tradition, it is believed that Emperor Xuanzong of Tang received assistance from the Northern Heavenly King, hence from the Tang Dynasty onwards, temples in the Chinese Mahayana Buddhism tradition began to enshrine the Four Heavenly Kings. However, in the Ming Dynasty novel "Fengshen Yanyi" (The Investiture of the Gods), the story of the Four Heavenly Kings was significantly altered, portraying them as the four demon generals aiding the tyrant Zhou, who were later killed by the combined efforts of Yang Jian and Huang Tian-hua. When Jiang Zi-ya was empowering the gods, under the command of the Primordial Heavenly Venerable, he conferred upon them the title of the Four Heavenly Kings, entrusted with the responsibilities of expanding the nation, ensuring peace and prosperity.

Upon entering a temple, one would often first encounter the four statues of the Four Heavenly Kings, the guardian deities of Buddhism commonly known as the "Four Heavenly Guardians" or "Four Heavenly Kings." In Buddhist lore, within Mount Sumeru, there is a mountain named Cakravada Mountain with four peaks, each occupied by one of the Four Heavenly Kings, protecting one of the four cardinal directions, hence their title. Placing the statues of the Four Heavenly Kings in the main hall signifies not only their protection of the temple's gates and tranquility but also symbolizes the path to wisdom through the implements they hold.

AUSPICIOUS CRANE PAINTING

The Auspicious Crane painting embodies not only divine radiance and royal splendor but also a sense of ethereal elegance and grace. The imperial palace stands majestically at the bottom of the composition, perfectly symmetrical, with two-thirds of the canvas dedicated to a deep blue sky, exuding grandeur and royal charm. The auspicious clouds encircling the palace break the horizon, adding a sense of tranquility and elegance to the scene, evoking a celestial beauty.

Furthermore, the presence of the cranes symbolizes noble aspirations and virtuous qualities. Two graceful cranes perched on the rooftop, poised and serene, amidst a swirling flock in the sky, exude a sense of purity and elegance, enhancing the overall composition with a touch of refinement and ethereal beauty.

This artwork encapsulates the essence of traditional Chinese culture and stands as a quintessential example of using surrealistic techniques in art, predating Western surrealism by centuries.

METALLIC DUAL SLEEVES

Forged in dying stars, a luminous metal survived cosmic wars to reach Earth. Its molecular memory bends to shield what it touches—a secret modern crafters harnessed.

Each sleeve gleams with self-repairing nano-layers, mimicking celestial armor. Light dances across its surface in prismatic ripples, echoing ancient defenses. The textured edges diffuse impacts, while an adaptive core stays supple yet resists sudden force.

Sliding in a card awakens a fleeting holographic shimmer—a silent vow of protection. Not just sleeves, but fragments of stardust reborn: guardianship shaped by eons, now bound to your deck.

ZHONGSHAN GOING ON EXCURSION

"Zhongshan Going on Excursion", painted by Gong Kai during the Yuan Dynasty, is more than just a painting. It's a window into the cultural and artistic landscape of that era.

The painting features General Zhongshan, a figure from Chinese folklore, on an extraordinary journey. He rides a donkey, calm and composed, surrounded by a strange entourage. Mischievous demons carry musical instruments or odd items, creating a lively, otherworldly scene.

This work isn't just visually appealing; it's a cultural treasure. It reflects the rich Chinese mythology where the human and supernatural coexist. The Yuan Dynasty's cultural blend provided the backdrop for Gong Kai to create this masterpiece that still captivates viewers today.

Dive into the story of "Zhongshan Going on Excursion" and be transported to a time of wonder and ancient Chinese art.
